OLD WESTMINSTER FOOTBALL.

Old Westminster football seems to be returning to the days of its fame. There was a time not so very long ago when Old Westminsters figured largely in semi-finals and finals of cup-ties. Of late years, however, this prominence has been, unfortunately, rather conspicuous by its absence. Misfortunes, too, came in rather unfair numbers upon the shoulders of the club. Younger blood began to be wanted badly in the ranks; but one misfortune, happily now departed, deserves rather special notice. We refer to the unlucky accident to the well-known goalkeeper, W. R. Moon, one of the most famous Old Westminster internationals. He was playing in the season 1894-95 against Old Carthusians at Vincent Square. In clearing he received an unlucky and rather serious blow upon the cheek-bone; it was greatly feared in consequence of this that the club would lose his services for ever. His reappearance in public, therefore, at Leyton against the Old Foresters in the London Charity Cup Competition on Saturday, January 18, was welcomed with joy by all followers of Old Westminster football, and his reappearance quite justified all expectations, for he was in great form indeed, clearing with all his old quickness. Another return was to be noticed in the same match, that of W. N. Winckworth, who has just come home from India. Though it cannot be said of the latter that he has as good a record as that of Moon, yet he is a most welcome reinforcement. With these two to assist them, Old Westminsters should work wonders. The club was drawn against Clapton in the first round of the London Cup, and succeeded in winning by a goal to nil. This cup might almost have been thought the special property of Old Westminsters. They have won it five times in all, the last occasion being in the season 1892-93. In the Charity Cup they have reached the semi-final, and are drawn against Ilford, with whom they should have a fairly even game. In the Amateur Cup, Casuals and Old Westminster were drawn together, and the Casuals proved victorious at Leyton on December 14, winning by two goals to one, after a good game. The Old Westminster have two things upon which they may be congratulated very heartily: namely, first, the devotion of the members of the club to it—an Old Westminster is rarely to be found deserting his colours, and in times of need, never; no part of England is too far, no engagement too pressing, to detain them from appearing for the 'Pinks.' The other praiseworthy fact is the interest evinced in the doings of the club by members of the School. When there is no match 'Up Fields,' and even when there is one, on great occasions such as cup-ties a detachment from the School always turns up at any ground accessible from Westminster, to cheer their champions on and counter-balance rival demonstrations. In this they are always ably assisted by certain from the 'railings' and elsewhere, who always form an Old Westminster crowd, such as does not often follow other old boys' clubs to such an extent. It is, therefore, only reasonable to expect that Old Westminster will follow up the improvement begun last year in reaching the semi-final round in both the London and Charity Cups, by still further successes, despite the loss they have sustained in the persons of A. H. Harrison and J. G. Veitch, with whose assistance they would probably be now one of the finest amateur clubs in the south of England.

WESTMINSTER WORTHIES.

No. 46. ROBERT FREIND, HEADMASTER.

THE most important event of Freind's headmastership was the building of the new dormitory. And this was not effected without a very pretty little squabble.

Sir Edward Hannes, a worthy Old Westminster, who in 1682 was elected to Oxford, where he subsequently became Professor of Chemistry, by his will directed that his executors should lay out the sum of £1,000 in erecting a building for the lodging of forty Queen's Scholars (they were Queen's Scholars then as now) in Westminster School, in such place as should be directed by the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. He desired that Sir Christopher Wren and Dean Aldrich, of Christ Church, should be consulted as to the design of the building, on which were to be inscribed the words: 'In honorem Annæ Reginae optimæ posuit Edwardus Hannes miles et archiater.' The old dormitory was, of course, the old granary of the monastery, which stood on stone arches in what is now Dean's Yard. Beginning almost opposite the archway by the headmaster's house, it ran southward parallel to the east side of Dean's Yard, and extended beyond the site of the present houses on the terrace. At the time of Hannes's death it seems to have been in want of repair. A suit was instituted in Chancery for the administration of his estate; and the Lord Chancellor decreed that the executors should lay out £1,000 in erecting a building for the lodging of the Queen's Scholars in such place as should be directed by the Dean and Chapter, who were to consult Sir Christopher Wren as to the design—Aldrich being then dead.

Sprat, Bishop of Rochester, who was then Dean, appears to have been the first person who started the idea of erecting the proposed new building in College Garden, but in this he met with considerable opposition from the Chapter. Indeed, seven of the prebendaries—including South—'by an instrument under their hands dated the 23rd of April, 1711, did protest against such design, and declared they neither did nor could give their consent to a thing so prejudicial to their rights, and detrimental to the good of the College.' Sprat accordingly, 'having always a tender regard to the peace of the Society,' gave up his plan, and not long after died. In the meantime, however, it was determined to build on the site of the old dormitory. It was pretty obvious that £1,000 would not go far towards the erection of such a building as was required; but Sir Christopher Wren certified that if the upper part of the old building were pulled down and a new roof with a ceiling and new windows were made, 'the same would be a decent and convenient room,' and he was ready to give his assistance when required. The Chancellor accordingly sanctioned the application of the £1,000 in the method proposed by Wren; and Freind, who was present in court at Sprat's request, 'being asked by the Lord Chancellor concerning the situation of the old dormitory, assured his Lordship there was no vacant place within the close so convenient for such a building.' This was on April 20, 1713; and three days after the Chapter directed 'that Mr. Battely and Mr. Lowe do hire Mr. Lambert's house for a year from Midsummer next, for the Queen's Scholars to lie in whilst the college chamber is now building,' and ordered estimates of the work to be prepared. But the estimates were not forthcoming as soon as was expected, and on May 20 following we find another order in the Chapter book, that no repairs are to be undertaken until the estimates are settled. The Queen's Scholars moved out of the old dormitory for a short time; but Atterbury, the new Dean, seems to have taken up Sprat's old plan for the building in the garden, for on January 7, 1714, plans for such a building were produced in Chapter, and afterwards printed and delivered to Freind and to the prebendaries with a view to their procuring subscriptions for the purpose. 'Upon which Dr. Freind concurred with the present Dean in removing the Scholars back from their private lodging to their old chamber; all thoughts of repairing it being then laid aside.' In the following February a Mr. Allen, the tenant of a house which adjoined the proposed site in College Garden, having applied for a renewal of his lease, provision was made for the new building by the insertion in the new lease of a clause enabling the Dean and Chapter to build on the site notwithstanding any obstruction which might be caused to the lights of Mr. Allen's house, and the amount of the fine which Mr. Allen had to pay for the renewal was reduced accordingly. And there the matter rested for the next four years.

In 1718 Atterbury took the question up and determined to push it through. A memorial was prepared; there was a Parliamentary grant of £1,200; the King gave £1,000, and the Prince of Wales £500; other contributions came in from other sources. An account of the proposed work was submitted to the Chapter; and once again the question of the site was discussed. Someone suggested building on the site of the old brewhouse—not far from the old dormitory in Dean's Yard—and Freind was desired by Atterbury to consult with the surveyor and to get a plan of the ground drawn, which was done. Eventually the Chapter met, and four of the prebendaries—Barker, Cannon, Sprat, and Broderick—supported the garden site. Bradford, the Bishop of Carlisle (who was also a prebendary), and Doctors Gee and Lyndford voted against any new buildings at all; presumably they were in favour of repairing the old building. Then 'Mr. Evans voted for the Garden,' says the Act of Chapter, 'and so did my Lord, and thereupon declared it was ordered to be built in the Garden.' 'My Lord,' of course, was Atterbury, who was Bishop of Rochester as well as Dean. There seems to have been no hurry, for it was not till June 14, 1719, that the assent of a sixth prebendary (Dr. Kimberley, Dean of Lichfield) was obtained; and thereupon it was 'ordered that the King's Scholars be removed to Chiswick, whenever my Lord the Dean shall think it proper; and that Dr. Dent and Dr. Barker, two of the Prebendaries, or one of them, go thither, and take the surveyor with them or him, to see what accommodation there now are (sic) or are wanting for the reception of them, and those which, by Dean Goodman's directions, are to be sent with them.' The allusion is, of course, to the buildings at Chiswick erected by Dean Goodman in Queen Elizabeth's time as a kind of sanatorium for the prebendaries, masters, and scholars. There is no reason to suppose that a removal to Chiswick, which was thus contemplated, was carried into effect, nor is it easy to see why it should have been considered necessary to move the boys at all, just at the time when the plan for repairing the old dormitory seemed finally abandoned.

Up to this time Freind appears to have been of no very decided opinion as to which was the best of the sites in question. It is true that in 1713 he had given evidence in favour of the site of the old dormitory, but he seems to have subsequently acquiesced in Atterbury's change of plan, or at any rate not to have actively opposed it. Unluckily, however, he had sometime between 1714 and 1718 purchased Mr. Allen's lease; and from the date of this purchase he certainly had interested motives of his own for withstanding the design of building in the garden. He may or may not have believed that there were disadvantages in connection with the garden site; but he clearly laid himself open to the imputation of consulting his private interests rather than the good of the School. It should not, however, be forgotten that, however preferable the garden site may appear in these days, when the School property has grown up round it, in Freind's time the School, as such, had no property at all, and indeed no separate corporate existence; that the locality has entirely changed; and that it does seem to have been an open question whether the money might not have been spent just as profitably in repairing the upper part of the old dormitory, which could have been done on a more extensive and permanent scale than that suggested by Sir Christopher Wren. The stone arches on which it stood were in good condition; and, though nothing was ever done towards maintaining them (they were used as vaults for a considerable period), they continued apparently as strong as ever till Dean's Yard was laid out.

Whatever were the merits of the case, it is clear that from this time Freind headed the opposition to Atterbury's plan; and the opponents lost no time in bringing matters to a head. In May, 1719, the Attorney-General, at the relation of Dr. Nicholas Only, Dr. Thomas Dent, Dr. Thomas Lyndford, Dr. Edward Gee, and the Bishop of Carlisle (five of the prebendaries), Freind himself, and one William Farrar, exhibited an information against Atterbury and five other prebendaries (Evans, Broderick, Cannon, Barker, and Sprat), praying a perpetual injunction to restrain them from building in the garden. From the outset Freind's zeal seems to have outrun his discretion, as he inserted the name of Dr. Watson (another prebendary) as a relator in the bill, which name was afterwards, upon Dr. Watson's application, struck out by order of Court. However, the relators obtained an interim injunction which was ordered to be continued till the hearing of the cause, which came on before the Lord Chancellor on June 18 and 20, 1720.

At the hearing the principal points relied on by the relators appear to have been that the prebendaries were seised of the College Garden as their freehold; that Freind was seised of a courtyard or little garden ten feet wide, leading from the School to the College Garden (over which it was proposed to throw an arch of the new building) as his freehold for life, independent of the Dean and Chapter; and that the houses of Dr. Dent and Mr. Farrar would be deprived of light and air. It was further alleged: 'That many inconveniences would attend such Building, particularly that it would entirely darken a Lobby of 30 foot long that leads to the School, very much obscure the light of the School Library, render the School (which has no air but from the Common Garden) very close and stifling, and greatly incommode two large Boarding Houses, which are now very airy, and receive about 80 sons of the Nobility and Gentry.' On the other side it was contended that neither the Dean nor any of the prebendaries had any separate interest in the College Garden, and that therefore the Dean and Chapter could dispose of any ground which belonged to them in common for the public benefit; that as to the little courtyard (which seems to have been called the School Garden, and to have been used successively by Busby, Knipe, and Freind, they having the key, enjoying the produce, and paying the gardener), such user and enjoyment were merely permissive; that no injury would be caused to Dent and Farrar or to the School by obstruction of lights; and finally, that it was the intention of Sir Edward Hannes that a new building should be erected, and that there was 'satisfactory proof that the Common Garden is the most convenient place for the Scholars, with respect to their Health, Learning, and Virtue.' Freind was, of course, accused of being influenced solely by his purchase of Allen's lease; and he or his counsel seem to have thought that the less said about that transaction the better.

The Lord Chancellor directed that the questions at issue should go to trial in the Court of King's Bench, and that the jury should have a view of the places in question. There seems to have been a considerable conflict of evidence; but the strong point in the relators' case was no doubt the injury that would be caused by the new building to the houses of Dr. Dent and Mr. Farrar. Dr. Dent's house must have stood on the ground which now forms part of the garden at the back of No. 3 Little Dean's Yard, for it was stated that the intended building would stand within less than five yards of Dr. Dent's house and at right-angles to it; and that the staircase through which the King's Scholars were to pass very frequently every day was next to Dr. Dent's best rooms. Mr. Farrar's house seems to have stood close by 'the Second Master's Lodgings,' which were on part of the site of the house now occupied by the Master of the Queen's Scholars, which was not built till 1790.

From the Lord Chancellor's decree Atterbury and his co-defendants appealed to the House of Lords. It is interesting to note that two of the counsel engaged in the appeal were Old Westminsters, Thomas Lutwyche (elected to Oxford in 1692), who 'led' for the appellants, and Spencer Cowper (subsequently a judge of the Court of Common Pleas, and the grandfather of the poet), who was junior counsel for the respondents. The House eventually allowed the appeal and sanctioned the garden site; but not till the opinions of the entire Chapter had once more been taken, when it was found that the prebendaries were equally divided—six for and six against. Atterbury therefore had the pleasure of carrying his scheme by his own vote. It is to Freind's credit that, in spite of his opposition to the site, he appears to have contributed largely towards the building when the funds ran short again, as they did in 1728. It was not finished till about 1730. Welbore Ellis, afterwards Lord Mendip, who lived till 1802, used to boast that he had slept in both the old and the new dormitory. He had been in College from 1728 to 1732.

Freind resigned the Headmastership in 1733. He had been made a canon of Windsor in 1727 and a prebendary of Westminster in 1731. He subsequently became a canon of Christ Church in 1737.

He seems to have been considered one of the best scholars of his time. Pope in the 'Dunciad' has made Bentley sneer at his attainments:—

'Let Freind affect to speak as Terence spoke.'

But Bentley himself gave the grudging tribute late in life that 'Dr. Freind was a better scholar than ever he had thought.' As a Latin verse writer Freind was probably unrivalled even in those days, when everybody wrote Latin verses. We need go no further for proof of his skill than the beautiful lines on the monument of his pupil, Philip Carteret, in the north aisle of the Abbey. And it should not be forgotten in this connection that he was the master who taught Vincent Bourne. He used, while Headmaster, to give his pupils important subjects of the day as the theses on which they were to exercise their talents for verse writing. Thus, the day after his brother had been sent to the Tower the thesis was, 'Frater, ne desere fratrem'; and on the Monday after the accession of George II., 'Nunquam Libertas gratior extat quam sub rege novo,' on which Morice, Atterbury's son-in-law, observed with some truth, 'Methinks *p*io might have stood as well, and have been as good a compliment to a new king.' Again, when the Duke of Cumberland asked for a play in 1727, the thesis given was, 'Celebrate duces qui vobis otia fecit.'

Freind died on August 9, 1754, and was buried at Witney, near Oxford, of which place he had been Rector. He married Jane, daughter of Samuel De L'Angle, prebendary of Westminster, by whom he had a son, William Freind, already referred to, who was elected to Oxford from Westminster in 1731, and subsequently became Dean of Canterbury. He married Grace Robinson, sister of his school-fellow Richard Robinson, afterwards Archbishop of Armagh, and had by her a son, John, who was elected to Oxford in 1772, and became Archdeacon of Armagh. He changed his name to Robinson, and was created a baronet in 1819. A son of his, Richard Freind Robinson, was admitted into College in 1801, and, having afterwards entered the army, served in the Peninsular War, and lived till 1847. Another son, William Freind Robinson, was elected to Oxford in 1812. We find, therefore, that, counting William Freind, the father of the Headmaster, five generations of the family were educated at Westminster.

LONDON CHARITY CUP.
OLD WESTMINSTERS v. OLD FORESTERS.

A company numbering about 1,500 assembled on the Essex County Ground at Leyton, on Saturday, to witness this encounter, an extra match caused by the retirement of the Tottenham Hotspurs upon embracing professionalism. Each side was strongly represented, and with the turf in good condition the play ruled very fast. As was anticipated, the game was very sternly contested, and although the Foresters had to accept defeat by three goals to none, they had a fair share of the game, and were pressing quite as often as their opponents. With the slight breeze behind them in the initial half the Westminsters were the first to press, but the play afterwards ruled very even, each side threatening in turn. Nearly twenty minutes had elapsed when Sandilands and Street put in a fine combined run, and Street wound up by landing the ball in the net with a fast, low shot. The Foresters replied by a determined attack, and two fast shots by A. N. Guy might have taken effect against a less capable custodian than Moon. The play was afterwards of an even character, and no further point being scored the Westminsters led at the interval by one goal to none. Upon resuming the 'Pinks' pressed, and Sandilands scored with a terrifically fast shot. For a long time after this the Foresters had decidedly the best of the exchanges, but all their efforts to score were futile. Less than ten minutes from the close Sandilands again scored. The response by the Foresters was another determined attack, but although they forced two corners, they were unable to score, and were beaten as above stated. F. R. Pelly, it will be seen, accepted the invitation extended to him by the Westminsters to play, while the victorious side included W. R. Moon and Winckworth, who have been absent from club football for some time.

Teams :—

PHOTOGRAPHIC SOCIETY.

AN exhibition of prints and lantern slides was held at the end of last term. Day and Jewesbury, who received prizes, showed some admirable prints; most of the rest, however, were hardly as good as usual. Some enlargements by Mr. Nall attracted considerable attention. Only two sets of slides were sent in for Mr. Nall's prize, which was won by Howarth. Mr. Baker, of Dulwich College, very kindly officiated as judge, and a vote of thanks to him was passed by the Committee.

There will be a lantern show at 5.15 on Friday, January 31, with a lecture by Mr. Hall on 'Ancient Rome.' Each member of the Society may bring two friends, and all members of the Seventh and Sixth are invited.

School Notes.

THE Junior House Matches last term were won by Home Boarders, who defeated Junior College in the final by 2-0. Junior College were without several of their regular team.

The Phillimore Translation Prize has been awarded to M. L. Gwyer.

The passage to be translated into Greek Iambics for the Ireland Greek Verse Prize is Swinburne's 'Mary Stuart at Solway Firth,' from 'I pass not out of prison to my friends,' to the end. Versions must be sent in to the Head-Master not later than noon on St. Matthias' Day, February 24.

Owing to the fact that Tottenham Hotspur have adopted professionalism, Old Westminsters have been re-admitted into the London Charity Cup competition, and have beaten Old Foresters by 3-0. The O.W.W. team was much strengthened by the inclusion of W. R. Moon, who has recovered from his accident a year ago, and W. N. Winckworth, who has just returned from Calcutta. Both proved that they can play as well as ever. In the London Cup, O.W.W. have defeated Clapton by 1-0.

The Glee Society intend to give some concerts this term 'Up School' on Wednesdays, at 5.15 P.M.

Anyone who wishes for a photograph of the cast of the Play, price 4s., should apply at once to The Captain, St. Peter's College, Westminster.

Our best congratulations are due to Colonel Sir Howard Vincent, M.P. (O.W.), upon whom has lately been conferred the honour of knighthood.

THE FIELDS.

WESTMINSTER v. CASUALS.

THIS match was played 'Up Fields' on December 7, and resulted in a draw of three goals each. Fox and Van der Gucht were both unable to play, and their places were taken by Kirkpatrick and Anderson, Blaker taking Van der Gucht's position of outside left, and Anderson going inside. The School won the toss and defended the Hospital end. The visitors kicked off at 2.50, and the ball was immediately transferred to their half, where it remained for some time. After about ten minutes Barnett scored with a low shot, which the goal-keeper should have saved. The game still kept in the visitors' half, and after the School had pressed hard Barnett scored again with a curly shot in the corner of the net, with which the goal-keeper had no chance at all. After the kick-off even play resulted for some time, but the ball was gradually worked down to the School end, when the visitors' outside right missed a good chance by sending the ball behind. The visitors still kept up the pressure, and Kennedy scored with a good cross shot (2-1). This roused our forwards, and they made a pretty run down the field, but Hogarth spoilt it by kicking behind. Soon after Fisher just missed a good chance, the ball grazing the post. Even play then resulted, but from a corner which Stenning had conceded our forwards took the ball up the field by a good combined run, and Moon scored (3-1). Blaker made a good run down the field, but kicked behind at the critical moment. Half-time was then called, the score being 3-1.

When the game was restarted it was for a time in our favour; we got 'hands' in a favourable position, and More put in a beautiful kick, which went into the net, but no one touched it. The visitors' forwards then took the ball down, and Davidson beat Stenning (3-2). Soon after the same player put in a hot shot, which Stenning saved well. Our goal was for a time bombarded, but Stenning saved in brilliant fashion; once he was penalised for carrying the ball, but nothing came of it. From a corner the inside left scored, and it was allowed by the referee, although the ball was at least two feet through the goal before anyone touched it. From now until the end play ruled fast and even, but nothing was scored, and the game ended, as stated above, in a draw.
